Historical note

The origins of 4-H clubs in Iowa can be traced back decades before the formation of the Extension Service and the formal organization of what we now know as 4-H Clubs. Interest in agricultural training for youth started as early as 1857 when the Iowa State Agricultural Society conducted a statewide corn growing contest for boys. This contest established some of the principles that were later used in the formation of 4-H: a contest was organized, a record of the project work was kept, the work was supervised, and a report was made. Subsequent contests were commonly held by institutes and fairs to provide educational and competitive opportunities for rural youth. Contests were also conducted by newspapers and agricultural magazines such as Wallace's Farmer and Successful Farming.

In 1902, A. B. Graham in Ohio began formalizing clubs for boys and girls to promote vocational agriculture as an extracurricular activity. His clubs, considered to be the founding clubs of 4-H, incorporated meetings, officers, and projects. In Iowa, Cap E. Miller, superintendent of schools in Keokuk County, was an early adopter of boys and girls club work. He began organizing Boys Agricultural Clubs and Girls Home Culture Clubs as early as 1903. O. H. Benson of Wright County and Jessie Field Shambaugh of Page County quickly adopted the club idea as well. Both would make major contributions to 4-H; Shambaugh wrote the "Country Girls Creed" and Benson is credited with creating the 3-H and later 4-H clover emblem which became the official emblem of 4-H.

Throughout the first decade of the 20th Century, Iowa State Extension staff played a valuable role assisting rural youth clubs. During this decade, public school leaders and local farm organizations were the primary coordinators for youth clubs. However, County Extension Agents often provided expertise and educational resources for the clubs. In January 1910 Iowa State College (University) offered its first junior short course and corn show for club members. During this event a state club organization was formed. The following year Iowa's first State Club Leader, E. C. Bishop, was hired with the task of organizing boys and girls clubs in Iowa.

With the passage of the Smith-Lever Act in 1914, Congress established the Cooperative Extension Service which provided support from the federal government for boys and girls club work in agriculture and home economics. By this time nearly every state had started boys and girls clubs, yet there was no one name by which the clubs were known. It wasn't until 1924 that the clubs became known as 4-H. In Iowa, the clubs were originally organized as separate boys and girls clubs and it wasn't until 1962 that the clubs were combined.

The early 4-H programs emphasized farm life and homemaking, but the focus quickly broadened in scope and content. Leadership, music, art appreciation, and recreation also became essential aspects of 4-H, especially in Iowa. Eventually, 4-H expanded beyond rural communities and now also offers programs for youth living in towns and cities across the country.

Collection description

The collection (1915-[ongoing]) contains a wide variety of records including annual reports, historian books, scrapbooks, conference programs, manuals, publications, and photographs and other media. These records thoroughly document the Iowa 4-H program and related programs such as the Rural Young People's Program throughout the first four to five decades of the program's existence. Thorough documentation for more recent years is currently lacking. Though there are some materials related to local and county 4-H clubs in the collection, the records primarily document the state organization.

The annual reports and historian books provide a detailed study of the first forty years of Iowa 4-H. The annual reports and historian books can contain project reports, photographs, officer information, news clippings, and a wide assortment of published materials. These reports mostly document activities of statewide significance, such as the state fair, state conferences, and other activities organized at the state level. Additional records related to Iowa 4-H can be found in Series 4 and include correspondence, manuals, news clippings, postcards, project books, publications, reports, and scripts.

The collection also includes programs and some records related to statewide conferences organized for youth. Records of the Iowa 4-H Youth Conference include programs dating back to 1916 when Iowa State held Junior Short Courses for boys and girls. The short courses turned into state conferences and conventions. Similar conferences offered by the Rural Young People's program would also be offered at Iowa State. These conferences, the Leadership Training Conference for Young People and the Rural Young People's State Assembly, were organized for young adults.

Photographs, slides, audio recordings, and videotapes related to the Iowa 4-H program are also housed in the collection. Photographs can be found in scrapbooks, historian's books, annual reports, or organized in file folders. These materials document 4-H club activities, state fair exhibits, National 4-H Club Congress delegates, camps, and conferences. The collection also contains slide sets used during presentations at club meetings and state conferences.

Description of seriesSeries 1 4-H Annual Reports 1920-1972

extent: 16.4 linear feet (39 document boxes)

description: This series contains the annual reports for the Iowa 4-H Boys' Clubs, the Iowa 4-H Girls' Clubs, and for the combined clubs. These annual reports were compiled by Iowa 4-H Extension agents and include detailed information on 4-H events of statewide significance, such as the state conferences, conventions, competitions, projects, and exhibits at the Iowa State Fair. Activities at the county or local level are only documented by the occasional inclusion of a program or news clipping to serve as an example of what the local and county clubs were doing. Many of the reports, especially for the Iowa 4-H Girls' Clubs, have numerous photographs and are quite extensive. Some of the reports are contained in multiple volumes and in some instances several copies are available. The series is listed chronologically with boys' clubs first, girls' clubs second, and reports for the combined clubs last. Similar materials can be found in the State Historian's Books listed in Series 2.

Description of series

Series 2 4-H Club Historian Books and Scrapbooks circa 1920-1966

extent: 12.9 linear feet (3 document boxes, 16 flat boxes)

description: This series contains scrapbooks created by the State 4-H Club historians. As with the annual reports, the state 4-H girls' club is more thoroughly documented than the boys' club. The historian books can contain a wide array of information and materials including correspondence, news clippings, newsletters, photographs, programs, and reports. Like the annual reports these materials document the activities, officers, and staff of the state 4-H clubs. Activities at the county or local level are only documented by the occasional inclusion of a program or news clipping to serve as an example of what the local and county clubs were doing. The series is arranged chronologically with the boys' club historian books first, girls' club historian books second, and any additional scrapbooks at the end.

Description of series

Series 5 Rural Young People's Program 1935-1969

extent: 2.94 linear feet (7 document boxes)

description: The Rural Young People's Program was established to offer educational and social training to young farm men and women between the ages of 20 and 30. As early as 1929, the Extension Service had been doing work with young men and women who were too old for 4-H club work, but a formal section was not created until December 1, 1935, under the direction of Earl N. Schultz. Initially, the program was divided into three major activities devoted to education, recreation, and service. The Rural Young People's Section created a monthly newsletter, "Over the State," conducted district conferences, held a two-day statewide Rural Young People's Assembly, initiated the Leadership Training Conference for Young People, planned district summer camps, and helped organize new clubs for young adults across the state. In 1955 it was decided that the Extension Service should not be responsible for organizing clubs for young adults. The Extension Service would, however, continue to assist clubs who requested educational materials and would continue to hold the Iowa Rural Young People's Assembly and the Leadership Training Camp for Young People. Annual reports for the older youth activities were eventually combined with the 4-H club reports.

This series contains annual reports of the Rural Young People's Program including annual reports, reports of the Leadership Training Conferences for Young People, reports of the Rural Young People's State Assemblies, a photo scrapbook, county membership records, and other materials. The files in this series are listed chronologically by topic with annual reports followed by conference reports, a scrapbook, and other related files.
