Historical note

The American Phytopathological Society (APS) was established in 1908. C. L. Shears of the U.S. Department of Agriculture called an initial meeting on December 15, 1908, to take the preliminary steps for organizing a general society of plant pathologists. A follow up meeting was held on December 30, 1908 in conjunction with a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) in Baltimore, Maryland. At this meeting, a council of five officers was elected to consider and make recommendations for establishing a permanent organization. The first formal meeting of the society was held in Boston, Massachusetts during the week of December 27, 1909-January 1, 1910.

Membership in the society is open to professional educators, researchers and others interested in the study and control of plant diseases. APS is based in St. Paul, Minnesota and holds one large meeting annually, but also consists of several regional divisions (Caribbean, North Central, Northeastern, Pacific, Potomac, and Southern), which also meet regularly.

Collection description

This collection (1878-[ongoing]) contains records of annual meetings (includes audio and video tapes), biographical essays about prominent plant pathologists, committee activities, correspondence, membership lists, meeting minutes, awards and honors, discussion about changes to the group's constitution and bylaws, photographs, publications and reports. Although the American Phytopathological Society was officially formed in 1908, plant pathologists held meetings in conjunction with other scientists prior to the formation of the society and records of these meetings and other documents were contained in some of the APS members' collections.

Organization

This collection is organized into twenty-three series:

Description of series

Series 1	Boards	1918 – [ongoing]
extent:	2.10 linear feet
description:	The Advisory Board was a direct successor of the War Emergency Board that was founded by APS during World War I with the belief that plant pathologists could contribute significantly to the war effort promoting cooperation and coordination of effort especially in regard to the production and conservation of food crops. The APS believed that a committee consisting of plant pathologists would accomplish certain aspects of this work more effectively than any existing agency. This series contains materials on the formation of APS, guidelines on the role of plant pathologists in developing programs and projects related to plant disease control, and registration and certification of plant pathologists. The series also contains outlines of the duties of board members, memoranda on activities of the committee and cooperation of APS with various organizations. The series is organized alphabetically and then chronologically.

Description of series

Series 8      Congresses      1919- [ongoing]

extent: 2.1 linear feet

description: The series contains materials on congresses in which APS has participated in as part of a larger group of international scientific societies or those sponsored by APS. These larger scientific organizations include the International Society of Plant Pathologists (ISPP) and the Intersociety Consortium of Plant Protection (ICPP). The series includes correspondence related to the planning and organization of the congresses, programs, annual meeting reports, proceedings and financial reports. The series is organized chronologically.

Description of series

Series 16      Organizations/ Groups Associated with APS      1900- [ongoing]

extent:      9.66 linear feet

description: This series contains material from organizations affiliated or associated with APS. The APS Advisory Board encourages members of the society as individuals and as a group to be affiliated to scientific societies whose work is related to plant disease control directly or indirectly, believing that greater collaboration with these societies would be beneficial to the society and to the science of plant pathology. The series includes correspondence, agendas and minutes of meetings, and reports. The series is organized alphabetically.

Description of series

Series 18 Programs 1919- [ongoing]

extent: 0.42 linear feet

description: This series contains materials on programs targeting specific areas to improve the health of plants and increase the awareness of the science of plant pathology to specific groups like teachers of biology. APS also participates in programs that promote multidisciplinary research between its members and other organizations in different disciplines and with other countries promoting international cooperation. APS participates or will support programs that target young people in K-12 and other under - represented groups to encourage them to consider careers in plant pathology. The series includes reports, correspondence and programs related to the programs. The series is organized alphabetically and chronologically.

Description of series

Series 19 Publications - Phytopathological Classics 1884- [ongoing]

extent: 3.36 linear feet

description: This series has been divided between the Phytopathological Classics and APS general publications. Subseries A, the Phytopathological Classics have been placed in their own subseries because they are separate from other APS Publications. Phytopathological Classics are under separate management and editorship. To order the Classics Subscribers need to contact the Business Manager of the Phytopathological Classics. The subseries is organized chronologically.
